

What can YOU do?

Spread the word and don't be afraid.

Some people might say that climate change is not a problem, or that nothing can be done about it. Our research says that it is simply not true. We can learn more about it, and what we learn can help us make better decisions.

Be more climate conscious.

It only takes little gestures to be more climate conscious. Although the weight of big decisions falls on policy, we can all turn the tap off while we wash our teeth, use less water, plant more trees, or turn down the heating. If you volunteer for an organisation, you could ask them to look at how they are affected by climate change, and what volunteers like you can do about it.

Use your power.

Wherever you are from, your political representatives have a part to play in funding research and enabling solutions. Your government should work for you. Challenge your representatives to think about climate change, and then vote for the ones whose answers convince you the most!

Join in or support our work

If you can, think about joining or supporting our excavations. If you can't, tell others about our work. The Vindolanda Trust is funded primarily by visitor spend, meaning that by visiting the site and encouraging others to do the same, you are directly funding all of our work, including our key research on climate change. Even if you cannot visit in person, consider becoming a Friend of Vindolanda.
